

Choose Your Own Adventure Stories

Part I: Reading

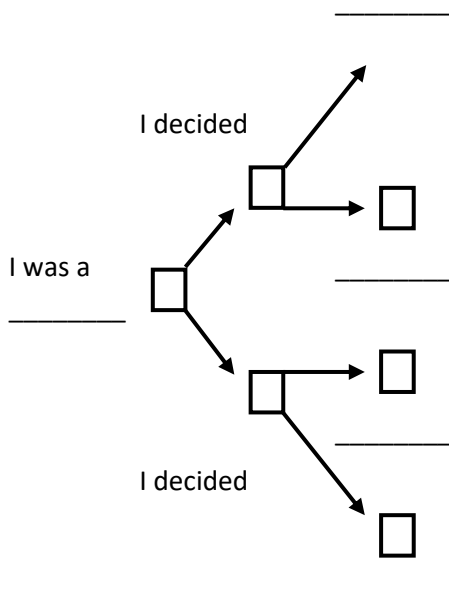

Reading a CYOA story is a little different from reading regular books. You will have to make lots of decisions and help guide your main character through the story.

Work with a partner and read the story together. At each decision point discuss your options and decide how you want to continue. Don't forget to speak ENGLISH ONLY!

You will soon find that some decisions lead to disastrous or very unsatisfying consequences or endings. You can always go back and take a different road.

In order to keep track of your wanderings through the story draw a DECISION TREE. At each turn write a short sentence what you decided to do and mark the page number. This will help you go back and try different paths. Use the double page inside to draw your diagram. It should look like this:

Decision Tree:

At the end, decide which is your favorite path through the story and which is your favorite ending. Highlight this path on your decision tree.

Then write a letter where your main character describes his/her adventure to a friend. Start like this:

Dear

You won't believe what has happened to me. I have just come back from....

Write about one page and describe the most important events in your adventure and how you felt about them.
